The sturdiness of the trees brings the idea of nature to MWC. Their ageless strength and stability survives hurricanes, droughts, and Junior Ring Week pranks. On campus, trees represent the beauty and the permanence that is Mary Washington. Join the 2000 Battlefield as we enter the new millennium and take a new perspective on the strength of Mary Washington College, and its stability across the years.

The bricks and columns of the buildings uphold the academic traditions and the standards of excellence of Mary Washington College. In a sense, the buildings make up the classic definition of the Mary Washington College Campus. Every building resembles one another. Every department maintains the academic presence of the college. Every aspect of MWC is maintained within the structure of these bricks and columns. These buildings unify our campus community.

Campus walk represents the journey you take through MWC. Along the way, you face many obstacles. The different academic buildings represent the major challenges that must be overcome. The administrative buildings are the paper work and hassles of life. The dining halls and residence buildings are the comforts you seek, and the mail and ATM are the perks. The journey through Mary Washington College may seem short or long, it just depends on where you want to go, and which walk you take.

Can this man actually move Melchers?
College is the act of pulling and being pulled.
There seems to be a million things pulling at us from every direction. We pull towards the things that we want to do, like our social lives and the maze of things to we do during the day. Yet, we are also being pulled towards our future with each step we take being closer and closer to graduation. The struggle between pulling and being pulled doesn't have to be a struggle - maybe they can pull in the same directions . . . wouldn't that be nice?

"Don't sweat the small stuff" is easy for them to say. Should we move off campus? What meal plan do we sign up for? Should we start the paper tonight or can it wait? Should we go out, or should we stay in? College is an accumulation of small stuff and how it affects our everyday lives. Learn to appreciate the small stuff - take a step back and focus in on the things that are important to you. For one thing, you will sometimes be amazed at what you will discover. And for another thing, the small stuff here is a hell of a lot better then the big stuff out there.

Windows are typically seen as viewpoints into the world, yet windows can also be reflections of the life around you. Sometimes the reflections in the glass are more profound and real than the objects you view through the window. These different perspectives on the same objects is what makes the world an interesting place to live. The Battlefield of 2000 completes the last reflections of the millennium, century and decade. It gives a different perspective on the common things of life and of campus. Enjoy.

What do you do on the weekends? Freshmen can't drive home anymore, so there has to be more people on campus. Dorm parties, dances, sporting events, on-campus activities and off-campus activities can fill up the whole weekend. What do you do after classes are done? No one can study for 24 hours straight. You can relax, watch TV, exercise, work or just hang out. It's Student Life, and maybe it's not that bad after all. It's all in your perspective. ✕

Why a campus walk?

Does anyone have the right answer?

Have you ever taken the time to think about why we have a campus walk at MWC? Is it simply a red brick walkway leading you to class, is it the center of campus life, the place to gossip, or is it home to those brave squirrels who come within inches of you? Campus Walk has many characteristics, but it depends on who you ask as to the answer you will get.

Every student can agree we are capable of walking to class on grass or dirt paths, but instead we walk on the never-ending bricks. Campus walk connects you to every parking lot, every residence hall, every academic building, and to little corners to study on the lawn. Its purpose is to serve us, the students. In addition, who can miss the mailman driving his golf cart, or the landscaping crew driving trucks down the center of the walk when classes let out?

You can also take another approach to defining the characteristics of Campus Walk. Campus Walk is where everyone congregates before, between, and after class. The fountain in front of Monroe Hall has never been empty of the gossip of "who did what? When? Where? And why?" and the constant murmur of why the fountain is never spouting water high enough - instead it trickles like it is hardly on. It is also the home to Rocktoberfest, ultimate frisbee, and the knickknack booths in front of Eagle's Nest.

Finally, campus walk is the home to many more animals and interesting species besides the students and faculty of MWC, and maybe this is why it was built. Take for example, the squirrels. They will scamper within inches of your nose as they climb up the trees surrounding the walk, and it will not phase them. There are the beautiful dogwoods and cherry blossom trees that bloom every spring, and the pansies that last through a foot of snow. Campus Walk is highlighted by the uniqueness it lends to MWC. Although no one has the right answer to why we have a Campus Walk, we all know we are better off with it.

Rock Your World

Rocktoberfest brings out MWC's talent and fall fever

Rocktoberfest kicked off the new school year with a bang, literally. Various bands from MWC performed in front of The Underground on September 30, 1999 from 4 to 7pm. Class Council and Giant sponsored the event, which was the first major event of the year for Mary Washington students.

"As a freshman, I was not aware of what was occurring outside The Underground, but I decided to leave my dorm when I heard the music," states Melissa Kirchner. Being the first real event of the year, many students, especially freshman, were able to mingle and catch up on their past summer activities. Although students did not watch the all of the performances, many enjoyed the environment as they passed by the stage.

Rocktoberfest included much more than simply music. Along with the live entertainment, food and beverages were offered to attract students to stop and listen. Chicken, biscuits, corn on the cob, and soda were given away to students.

Students also enjoyed festivities besides the live entertainment. Students could climb an inflatable wall, joust with a gladiator baton, or sumo wrestle in oversized outfits. The major attraction was the dunking booth. Students could take out their frustrations on anyone who consented to being inside the dunking booth. All it took was aiming the ball at the bulls eye and the person was wet.

Giant Productions and Class Council successfully put on an event with great fanfare. Students did not have to pay a dime for the event. Everything was provided for students for them to enjoy. The beautiful and sunny day also helped bring out students to take part in the festivities.

C MWC explodes with live entertainment and sporting events celebrate Spirit

The 1999 Homecoming was a week of spirit activities climaxing in an impressive showing by Mary Washington sport teams. Class Council organized the entire week to increase school spirit through getting the students involved with campus activities. Fall Festival, Mardi Gras, a Lip Sync contest, a bonfire, and the Dance of the Decades created an atmosphere on campus no one wanted to miss.

Fall Festival was held outside the Underground and included live entertainment and food for students. Mardi Gras took the live entertainment aspect of Fall Festival and added a Cajun twist, not forgetting the appropriate food and dance. The best homecoming event of the week occurred in Dodd Auditorium with the Lip Sic Contest. Students from across campus joined forces to make hilarious routines as they vied for the $400 top prize. The judges decided a Dirty Dancing remake made the cut as the best performance of the night. The second annual bonfire, reaching two stories, took place between Mason and Randolph hall on Thursday night. Hot apple cider and donuts were a side note to the introduction of all the fall sports teams and their upcoming games. Friday ended with the Dance of the Decades. Students cut loose and wore costumes signifying their favorite time in history.

The highlight of the weekend took place on Saturday, when our women's and men's athletic teams competed against their rivals. The boys' soccer team crushed York College in a convincing 3-0 victory while enthusiastic alumni and students came out in support. The Battlefield did not calm until the women's soccer and rugby teams clinched wins.

The weekend could not end, though, without a complaint. Many students of legal drinking age became upset with the alcohol policy. The police made many students, no matter their age and the substance they drank, dispose of the beverage in their cups. Even with the minor problems, the day was full of partying and school spirit.

A guitarist performs with his band during one of the many chances students receive throughout the year to perform in front of and inside The Underground. The Underground and Giant Productions together provide opportunities that allow bands to perform throughout the year. These events draw out MWC students in support of their peers.

Walking down campus walk, it is hard to miss The Underground's enticing little sign outside its steps. Written in brightly colored chalk, The Underground's publicity tries profusely to advertise their nightly events so students walking by will take notice. The Underground is usually not bustling unless such popular events as Open Mic Night and Literary Readings occur. The school encourages the MWC Community to perform a solo or ensemble in front of their peers. There are no pre-sold tickets, which encourages students to enjoy a night of free entertainment. Performers do need to sign up in advance, they can not just walk on stage and perform their number. This allows the organizers to vary the performance schedules. The performers are lucky enough to have the sound and lights run by experienced students while they perform their act. They are, however, required to furnish their own performing equipment.

Performances are pulled from all genres. One act may be a rock band while the very next may be an ensemble of violinists and cellists. Along with the diversity in music, bands performing may be experienced or this may be their first time performing as a group. The wide range of performances shows the diversity of MWC's community. Professors have been known to drop in and read their works. This is a great opportunity for students to see their professor's work first hand. Many students are able to appreciate their professor's ability more after they seem him perform then before.

Not only are professors more appreciated for their work, but also students become the focus of attention. They are more noticed and appreciated for their talents because they came to perform. The availability of The Underground for students and professors to perform is an addition to campus life that is well appreciated by all.

Large numbers come out to support their peers as they perform. Students don't normally pack The Underground unless there are performances.

FRED Express Arrives Students receive door to door service

This year was the first year that freshman were told to leave one specific thing home: their cars. This is due to overcrowding of the parking lots and the theory that if freshman do not have cars, they will not leave campus on the weekends. Freshmen, of course, are not happy with the decision. It means that on Friday and Saturday nights, if there is no party to be found, they have to chill in the dorms. There are those lucky freshman that are fortunate enough to make friends with the upperclassmen and receive rides to Central Park or the mall. For the rest of us, we are forced to stay home or take a taxi. The new ruling frustrates many freshman, including Alyssa Tice who said, "In theory it makes sense, but because we don't have cars, we feel like we have less to do here at MWC; therefore, we want to leave even more. Not having a car never prevented me from leaving."

Some freshman did not abide by the rule. More than a few brought their cars to school and parked them on Sunken Road, College Avenue or over in the Giant parking lot. "I decided to bring my car to campus so I didn't have to worry about finding a ride home or making my parents come pick me up at inconvenient times," stated Sarah Miller, who parks her car on Sunken Road.

To alleviate the problem, MWC donated $40,000 dollars to the FRED Transportation System. With the donation, the FRED Express began service to MWC students on November 18, 1999. Students are able to ride the bus free of charge when they present their MWC student ID card. The bus route is designed to cater to students' needs with stops at Central Park, Spotsylvania Mall, Hyperion Coffee, Carl's Ice Cream, and Giant. Freshman Erin Wittoefft said, "The FRED express is a good solution to a bad problem, but it is still not as good as having my own car here on campus."

Jammed into Corners

Residents face a year of cramped living space

This year, one of the biggest stories affecting student life is the overcrowding of the dorms. The problem can be attributed to the dramatic increase in the size of the freshman class this year, with over 800 students. Many more freshmen decided to attend Mary Washington than expected, as a result, space in the residence hall diminished. The final outcome was creative placement on the part of Residence Life and Housing. Students were crammed in rooms meant for fewer residents.

Students arrived on campus in the fall to find that the increased student population resulted in many uncomfortable room placements. Students were placed in basements, triples in double rooms, and in many instances, seven people sharing a suite bathroom. Placement problems spilled over to Resident Advisors (RA's). Even though it is specifically stated in their contract that they are entitled to a single room, many RA's found themselves with roommates. Overcrowding even affected plans to renovate the Woodward Campus Center. The Student Government offices were planned to be removed from the Center and placed in Mercer. Since the dorm still housed students, the move did not occur.

When students were asked what they thought about the overcrowding, many expressed some concern that the admissions office accepted too many students. One student said, "It wouldn't have been an issue if so many people hadn't been accepted to the college. They obviously overextended themselves. I just hope they learned their lesson for next year." A freshmen comments on her situation in a triple in a double room, "I wouldn't mind being in a triple if there was more room, but to put three people in a room that wasn't designed for three people is hard. We all have lofts, but we have absolutely no space in our room. Not to mention the fact that we share the bathroom with a quad. Needless to say the mornings are very hectic."

Second semester, many of the overcrowding issues were reduced when students transferred or left the college.

Putting desks together to make one huge surface is a common occurrence in dorm rooms. The size of desks often times makes it hard to place them so their size can be best maximized.

The three windows in this room are very deceiving to people passing by. Light makes each dorm room seem larger because it creates a false perception of depth.

Herman

iving in a forced triple becomes a space issue. Often times lofts and single beds end up touching because there is not enough available space.

aking a different view, this room in Virginia Hall is covered from wall to wall with the necessities of college life.

Herman

utting away the messiness in most college dorm rooms is hard when more students live in a space that is made for fewer people. Residents are forced to give up personal space.

*W*idening your horizons

Students scramble to cover global requirements

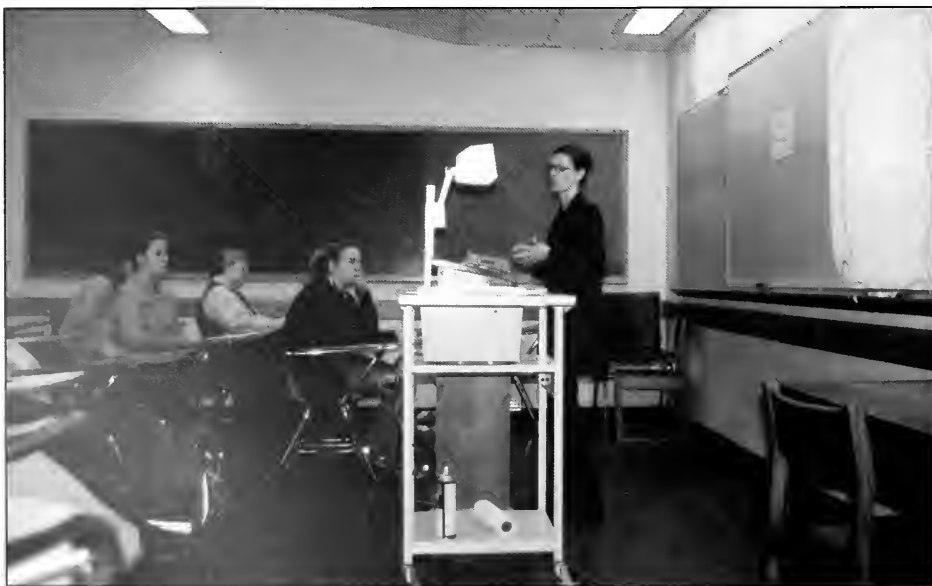

The across-the-curriculum requirements for graduation can at times be very hard to coordinate into a schedule that includes very specific classes. When the school implemented these requirements in 1997, they wanted to create students with a more diverse understanding of the world. The requirements include four writing intensive courses, two global awareness courses, two speaking intensive, and one each of race and gender intensive and environmental awareness.

There are two sides to the argument when it comes to debating whether or not these requirements are good for students. Some students believe the requirements are more of a hassle than they are worth. It is very hard to get into classes that are designated across-the-curriculum because every student is looking to fulfill the exact same requirement. For example, to meet the race and gender intensive requirement, a student can choose from a selection of only five classes in the Fall of 2000 (some of these courses do have more than one section designated, though). With this small opportunity to take required courses, no wonder there is a debate on whether it is fair for students. It is good when the class you need just happens to be designated as across-the-curriculum, but when it is not, the student has to go fishing for certain classes.

Then there is the other side to the argument: the beliefs that the requirements enrich the academic atmosphere at MWC. Melissa Pelletier states, "The across-the-curriculum program really makes students take courses outside of their major to broaden their realm of knowledge." Mary Washington is a liberal arts college and the requirements play an important part in receiving a well-rounded education.

The students at MWC are forced to comply with the requirements if they plan on graduating, whether they like them or not. When it comes down to it, the across-the-curriculum requirements do cause some unwelcome hassles, but these hassles will not prevent a student from enjoying the education he is receiving.

Gomez

Tara Neviackas gives a presentation in her Global Issues in Literature class which fulfills a gender intensive requirement. The Physics and Geology labs are popular classes because they complete both a science and environmental awareness requirement.

Residents of Marye House Enjoy Substance-free Atmosphere

Residents of the Marye House take excursions together to create a family-like atmosphere. Teresa Hart, Rebecca Casto, Andrea Baker, and Kristy Gasser pose with a scarecrow during their excursion to the pumpkin patch.

Residents of the substance-free dorm become more like a family because of the limited number spaces available in the dorm.

Coed or all female? At one point, this was the only housing choice afforded to students here at MWC. Over the years, Residence Life and Housing started to offer students the option of living in specialty floors in dorms across campus. From Women With a Voice, to Service Learning and the Foreign Language floor, individual communities have sprung up across campus, building close relationships between individuals. The 1999-2000 Academic year was the first year that the college offered substance-free housing to its students.

It is called Marye House, a white residential house tucked away behind Mason and next to the amphitheater. The close-knit family-like environment is made of 13 women, and 3 men. Blaine Ashworth, RA for the entire house, says, "The substance-free house gives me a sense of community I never thought possible in a collegiate experience." The House does everything as a group, from picking out pumpkins at Halloween, to participation in the college Lip Synch competition, to going on picnics at local parks, or to a Pot-Luck Dinner once a month. A family has been forged in Marye House, based on values common to all residents.

Indeed, sitting in the house, where everyone has a shared belief, feels like one is visiting an old family. Kristy Gasser, Marye Hall Council President says there is only one real drawback to living there, it is very noisy. Everyone knows everybody, so it is hard to get work done.

Marye House has not always stood where it does now. Some years ago, it served as the President's house off campus. It was later moved onto campus, where it served as a study house for women who maintained certain GPAs. This is its first year as substance-free housing, and its last. Next year, Marye house will become Administrative offices for student activities and residence life. At the Marye House, friendships are forged through shared interests and living together. When these situations are combined, a special place is created where lifetime friendships are established.

The goal of the Mary Washington Theater Department is to educate the students on a more cultural level. They have always been dedicated to bringing plays to the campus that are not necessarily well-known.

They started off the fall semester of 1999 on a light note by choosing a musical that actually handled a difficult subject. The name of the show was Baby. It dealt with issues of pregnancy in the cases of three separate couples. One middle-aged couple desperately wanted a child but could not seem to get pregnant. Another couple was extremely young and found themselves accidentally pregnant. The last couple was quite a bit older with grown children who had moved out of the house, yet they found themselves pregnant again.

Later on during the fall semester, the department brought a more culturally informative and historical play to MWC audiences. The name of this play was Caucasian Chalk Circle. This play examines life in a foreign country in the sixteenth century. It is the story of a young girl who works in the governor's palace. She is in love with a man who must go off to fight in the terrible war that is going on. When the palace and village are invaded because of the war, the governor's child gets left behind and a servant girl takes her into her care. Later in the play, a custody battle ensues.

Early in the spring semester of 2000, the play Approaching Zanzibar was produced. This play was one that dealt with the issues of love and family. A family desperately tried to cross the great continent of America to reach their dying aunt. They learned lessons of love and caring and discovered quite a bit about each other along the way.

The Mary Washington College Theater Department has done a superb job of educating its students about the different cultural aspects of theater.

the class of 2000 Graduation

Graduation marks the end of an era, the finalization of years of hard work, of friendships, and of growth. These college years have been the most impressionable years of our lives - we learned to be independent, we learned that we can do it by ourselves, and we learned to succeed. We should be proud of ourselves.

May 13th turned out to be a scorching hot morning, and it didn't make things any easier that 801 graduates had to sit out in the hot sun with long black robes on. (All the professors and special guests got to sit underneath a tent in the shade....) Looking around the group of graduates, one could see people drinking from water bottles, people wearing umbrella hats instead of mortar boards, and graduates tossing a beach ball around all the group. Mostly, one could see graduates hugging each other after they received their diplomas, and taking some last minute pictures as friends say good bye to one another.

People came from all over the United States to take part in the celebrations, and the day's events were enjoyed by all. At the beginning of the ceremony, a plane flew above ball circle pulling a banner congratulating one graduate. Additionally, parents in the crowds held signs, and blew horns and whistled when their child walked across the stage.

Some of us will move on to jobs, some of us will get married, and some of us will continue in our education. Where ever life may lead us, may we always remember and cherish Mary Washington college, the place where it all began....

Celebrating MWC's Diversity

10th Anniversary of the Multicultural Fair

The American Indian Song and Dance organization performs a native dance in front of Lee Hall. Lee Hall, Trinkle Hall and George Washington Hall were booked with performers during the entire duration of the Multicultural Fair. A very wide range of genres took part in the festivities, from Indian to Chilean to Peruvian to Middle Eastern to Greek to Country Western.

This year's Multicultural Fair attracted approximately 4,000 students, faculty, and members of the community. The annual event held along Campus Walk and Ball Circle is the highlight of the spring semester for many people.

Although the day did not have the best weather conditions, it went well with no major problems. Campus and Fredericksburg police successfully blocked off College Avenue for the parade. The kickoff parade, "Differences Enrich Us All," was designed to celebrate the turn of the millennium and the tenth anniversary of the Multicultural Fair at MWC.

Vendors lined Campus walk as early as 8am, although the official hours of the fair were 10am to 5pm. The fair attracts multicultural crafts, food vendors, live entertainment, and children's activities. There were many tables representing African, Middle Eastern, Asian and South American cultures.

George Washington Hall, Trinkle Hall, Ball Circle and Lee Hall all had stages set up to display various types of dance and musical talent. Country Western dancing, spiritual gospel singing, Russian and Eastern European music, and Salsa Dancing were represented at the GW stage throughout the day. Lee Hall, the main stage, was the home to Chilean, Peruvian, and African dancing while the Trinkle stage had similar cultural performances.

The community was very involved in the planning and excitement of the event. Community organizations and business helped sponsor various activities aimed at cultural awareness. Daybreak, a volunteer program run by MWC students, brought mentally and physically disabled children to the fair. Face painting, an inflatable climbing wall, the food and various crafts caught the attention of everyone. Kerri Pakurar states, "the children at the fair really appreciated the opportunity to indulge in things they never before had the chance to see or do."

Junior Ring Week is one of MWC's most long-standing traditions. This is the week of celebration as juniors become "official" members of the college and receive their class rings.

There are some creative pranks that students play on juniors. Filling shower heads with Koolaid, removing all the belongings from someone's room and setting them up in the same style in the middle of Trinkle rotunda, or a random car parked in the middle of ball circle are just a few examples. But, then again, there are the more embarrassing pranks, like the pictures you wished never existed that are posted around campus, or the dirty underwear hanging from academic buildings.

Despite the fact that Junior Ring Week is one of the few traditions MWC has left, it appears that the administration is trying to prevent the pranks that occur during this week. We can all admit that there are some pranks that get out of hand, and that MWC has a responsibility to protect the students. There is the member of a varsity team who was locked in a dog cage by other teammates and then thrown in the fountain. This prank is to the extreme, and people can get seriously hurt or even die. We can all agree that administrative intervention is needed in situations like this.

Although in some cases warranted, administrative intervention has gotten out of hand. An e-mail was sent out from President Anderson to all the HRs and Ads, stating, that if they see any pranks, they have no choice but to take names and write people up. Students who are not harming juniors are being written up. Juniors who consent to what is happening to them are having their names taken while their perpetrators are being written up. Students returning from the grocery store are getting their names taken in addition to the items in their grocery bag being recorded. If they are later found using any of those groceries in a prank, they are written up.

The extreme to which this intervention is taken is ridiculous. Can't the president and the administration just allow students to have their traditions, and can't students come up with more creative pranks that no one gets hurt and no one's life is in danger?

Dorms Come Alive

Dorm sponsored events liven up campus

Every year the hall council of each dorm tries to make life more interesting for its residents and those students in other dorms. Since there are no sororities or fraternities at Mary Washington, the social scene has to be created in other ways. This is where the dorms make their niche in the life of students outside of school work. Residence halls make a concerted effort to attract people of all walks of life and interests.

Ball Hall put on a very different form of entertainment for students and faculty. Most times the activities are intended to be very social, but Ball Hall sponsored a Talent Show. The show allowed both students and faculty to display their latest musical piece, or read their latest poem. Although bad weather moved the event from Ball Circle to Lee Hall the students were not discouraged.

The most common event is a dance. Many dorms put on dances this year, but it was the first year for a dance to be sponsored by a freshman dorm. Russell Hall adopted the "Fallen Angels" to go with the way their dorm lobby is designed. The split floor lobby signifies heaven and hell.

Furthermore, Marshall Hall an event similar to that of Russell, but had a barbecue before the dance. In most dorms, the ideas are left up to the residents. Suggestions are taken and then the dorm, as a whole, votes on the final decision.

Hall Councils also have activities only for their residents. In Mason Hall, the council sponsored Safe Split. The purpose of the event was to encourage safe sex. Sex jeopardy was played followed by a demonstration on how to correctly use a condom. The evening ending with banana splits for everyone who participated.

Events like the ones above are only a few of what MWC students do to stay busy on Friday nights. The dorms play an important role in the life of every student.

Your Passport

"We are living in an increasingly interdependent world. To survive and prosper in this world, as individuals and as a nation, we must establish close, meaningful contacts with our counterparts in other countries." - the Council on International Education Exchange.

There is no better opportunity to experience another culture than through study abroad. Mary Washington students can choose from programs sponsored by the school, direct enrollment in foreign institutions, or other American programs abroad. If a student chooses to study outside of MWC, he must obtain approval from the Office of International Academic Services. Additionally, the student needs to meet the eligibility requirements of the institution and pay tuition to that institution, not MWC. Transfer credits can be applied to major requirements, and are factored into the MWC GPA. The benefits of attending a MWC-sponsored program are vast. The student pays normal tuition costs to MWC and receives direct credit for the courses taken. What is more important, the credits factor directly into the MWC GPA.

The programs sponsored by MWC offer both educational and cultural experiences. Not all study abroad programs require language proficiencies; therefore, MWC offers programs with and without language requirements.

Mary Washington students have studied around the world: Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Belize, Canada, Chile, China, Columbia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Czech Republic, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, England, France, Germany, Greece, India, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Kenya, Madagascar, Mexico, Morocco, Namibia, Nepal, New Zealand, the Netherlands, Russia, Scotland, Senegal, South Africa, Spain, Thailand, Vietnam, Wales, and Zimbabwe. It is not just the countries that span the globe, but also the majors of the students who study abroad.

The IAS office offers twice weekly information sessions, monthly workshops, and an annual fair to allow students to familiarize themselves with the program they would like to attend, and to get first hand experiences from fellow students. There are three very important steps to planning a leave of absence from MWC to study abroad: researching and choosing the program/institution, applying for the program, and predeparture administrative details required by MWC. Research for a program should begin at least a year before the student intends to leave.

The destination should be chosen by the fifth week of the semester preceding the study abroad experience. All applications need to be mailed by the ninth week, and completions of predeparture requirements have to be done no later than the fifteenth week of the semester.

In closing, "Going Abroad is a voyage of discovery. You discover the world beyond your one country. But you also discover your one country because, for the first time, you can see it from another perspective and compare it to another way of life," a MWC student upon his return from Spain.

Experiences Not Forgotten

Around the World and Back to MWC

Many travelers go through an initial period of euphoria and excitement, overwhelmed by the thrill of being in a totally new and unusual environment." This opening line from the "Study Abroad Handbook," is given to all MWC students preparing to leave the MWC campus in exchange for a semester of excitement, adventure, and a little education too. The Fall '99 semester was an experience 23 men and women will not soon forget, neither will the 47 individuals who study abroad over Spring '00. Their majors covered areas of academic study, from Biology to the Classics, Art to Business, and Foreign languages to American Studies.

In a far off country, our fellow students take regular classes, taught in different languages, with people from completely different cultures.

Immersed in a foreign culture, taking difficult classes, and far from home, what is a 20/ 21 year old to do? Enjoy it! Kevin Cain, who went on Wayne State University's Junior Year in Munich program, remembers his first day in Germany as a highlight of his trip, "We'd been awake for 24+ hours, but didn't want to go to sleep yet because it was only 2 pm due to the time change. So a group of six of us decided to go and check out Oktoberfest. I've never seen anything like it." Most memories were not just of the single experiences, but of the general feeling of being in another world. It is not just the food, or the language, or even the idiosyncrasies of the culture that make the international experience memorable; it is the sensation that you are exploring a civilization that mirrors your own in many ways, but exudes an air of other-worldliness. Individuals who love to travel, learn, and experience life find so this very appealing. Ashley Groesbeck, who attended Kingston on the Thames, in London, does not cite any one instance in remembering her study abroad program; instead, she remembers seeing the Thames River every morning on the walk to the University.

Coming to college is an experience where a teenager becomes an adult. To many students, studying abroad completes the whole college experience, opening one's eyes to so many new and exciting things. No one who attended a study abroad program in the 1999-2000 school year here at MWC will soon forget the experience, or who he became because of it.

An "Eugenius" Performance Tribute to Eugene Roscoe

The Mary Washington College Performing Arts Club performed Eugenius in memory of Eugene Roscoe. Roscoe was an associate professor of dance at MWC for five years before he lost his battle with AIDS. As a result of his death, and in honor of what he did for MWC, every fall concert is named Eugenius. Roscoe danced here, abroad, and with world-renowned dancer Alvin Ailey. In addition, he designed his own clothing line, ran a physical fitness facility, and worked as a physical trainer. Roscoe was a major supporter of students within the dance department and advocated for all levels of dance. Regretfully, dance was cut from the theatre department's curriculum in 1997, shortly before his death in 1998.

The themes of this year's performance did not center on Roscoe, but rather gave students free reign to establish their own choreography and movements. This was unlike last year's performance, which displayed the impact Roscoe had on his students and actual dances he choreographed before his death.

The ability level of the dancers are not a major problem when performing in a concert. Take for example, a freshman, who never danced before coming to MWC, did a wonderful job and the audience never could tell from her movements she was a beginner. One great aspect of the club is that past students come back to MWC each year and help choreograph dances. This adds an extra asset to the performance because it shows students really care about their performance and how it is presented.

The performance of Eugenius was the work of many students who choreographed and ran the performance. With no school funded financial aid, the students provide for every piece of the performance. Sarah Pack, a senior, describes her "most memorable moments from the performance are not the actual dancing I do, but watching my pieces being performed." To show the family-like atmosphere of the club, Sarah goes on to say, "Another nice moment comes right before we are to take the stage. The club finally comes together as one group and stands in a big circle and gives each other back massages to say good luck before the performance."

The Company performs their closing number of Act I to Season's of Love which is a story of growing up. Sarah Pack and Portia Copper lead the dance to its closure himself, belonging to the King, sweep across the stage to take the King's love to him. The women are performing to an Indian song, Tandava Nitya.

Unexpected Nor'easter Brings 12' of Snow

Throughout the winter months, the weather at Mary Washington is relatively mild. Many MWC students began to believe winter weather never ventures south of the Washington to Fredericksburg region; it had been more than three years since more than an inch of snow accumulated on campus. However, a surprise came on the morning of January 20th and 25th, when students and staff awoke to a "winter wonderland" of snow.

Students who normally struggle to make it to early morning classes gave a sigh of relief when they heard classes were canceled. Residents congregated along Campus Walk and in Ball Circle at daybreak to enjoy the winter weather. "I've taught a lot of morning classes and students have a hard time getting up for them. I have never seen so many college students up at 8:00 am in the morning before," one professor commented. All across campus makeshift sleds replaced books and classes, snowball fights were waged and snowmen popped up.

The snow allowed students to demonstrate just how inventive they could be. Pieces of cardboard, bright orange recycling bags, and dinner trays from Seacobeck became spur-of-the-moment sleds. Snowball fights broke out in front of most dorms. In some places, the snowball fights took the form of a dorm rivalry.

In general, the snow day turned out to be a welcome relief from school for many students. Though many students went out to frolic in the white stuff, some students looked at the day off as a time to catch up on some schoolwork. "I would love to go play in the snow, but I just have too much work to do. Besides, it's way too cold to be outside," one first year student lamented. Either way, most students concurred that the snow, and the resulting three days off, were needed free days and a distraction from the rigors of classes.

The center of campus, Ball Circle, became a snow football field as students gathered in friendly competition. It was also host to many snow related activities during the winter weather.

Ivey Drive is used by students as a make-shift hill for sledding. During every snowfall, Ivey Drive is closed due to its steep slope and dangerous conditions.

George Washington Hall is the home to the administration and President William Anderson's office. The building is also the home to many school funded performances.

When exactly does senioritis kick in? When does the fear of life outside of Mary Washington settle in? Seniors have to leave a comfortable world filled with the things they know to venture into the unknown. Change the perspective and it's the best year on campus. It took you four years, but you now rule the school: You get the simple things like good class registration times and events like 100th night and senior countdown dedicated just for you. It may be your last year, but oh what a year it is. ✕

How many faces can you remember? No matter how well you research a college, you can't discover what kind of people you will be spending four of "the best years of your life" with. We all study, eat, sleep, play, party, and work together on the same 130 acres. MWC can get crowded, too familiar, and the people may drive you crazy. If this happens to you, change your perspective - it wouldn't be the same if even one person was missing.✕

ryan Holt gives his trusting friend, John Ramira, a hair cut in the lobby of Westmoorland. If you have someone you can trust, then this way might be safer than taking your chances in Fredericksburg, but sometimes it's worth the 15 bucks to go get a haircut!

a Mary Washington Student

Mary Washington College recruits students from all over the United States and some foreign countries as well. The college attempts to make the student population as diverse as possible. Everyone who attends this school is comes from different backgrounds and has so many qualities to offer the other Mary Washington students. Sharing backgrounds, ideas, dreams and aspirations enables students to experience a part of the lives of other students, and gives them a chance to learn about someone who may not be exactly like themselves.

But, when you stand back and ask yourself, what qualities really make up a Mary Washington Student? Some characteristics of MWC students are that they are dedicated, hard-working, intelligent, and able to have a good time. In addition, Mary Washington students are committed to their community, be it their dorm community, their school community or the community of Fredericksburg.

Mary Washington is composed of so many different people. Here in the people section of this book, we explore some of the different people who make up the Mary Washington campus. There are students who transfer in from other schools, there are students who are members of an athletic team, there are students who work at on-campus jobs, and there are your basic freshmen, sophomores and juniors. In this section, we investigate what a typical day would be like for these different people. Join us on our exploration on the "day in the life of a Mary Washington Student."

Sometimes the best thing about college is the people that you meet and live with. Hang out time is essential to get through the 14 week semester, and these girls look like they are taking full advantage of the time they are not in class!

a Student Athlete

7:30 a.m. - My alarm goes off and it's time for a nutritious breakfast of organic cereal. I have to watch what I eat, which sometimes really sucks.

8:00 a.m. - With my Spanish and Biology Lab manual in hand, it's off to classes. I have to take early classes so I can practice in the afternoons. I wish I had priority registration...

12:00 p.m. - LUNCH TIME! Quickly, I battle the lines at Seacobeck and then dash down to the post office to see if there is any mail... I'll take anything! I just want mail!!!!

1:00 p.m. - Rushing back to my room, I grab my books and head off to Jepson for back to back classes.

3:00 p.m. - Now it's off to Goolrick to lift weights before practice. I have to keep ahead of the game, and besides, the gym is beginning to feel like home for me.

4:00 p.m. - Off on a 6 mile run around Fredericksburg with the rest of the team. I defiantly know my way around this town better then most students!

6:00 p.m. - Just enough time to shower and eat before hitting the books. I wish I had time to relax, but no such luck.

7:30 p.m. - Gone to the library to study for tomorrows classes. If I'm at the library, I'm less likely to get distracted.

1:00 a.m. - Time to get some sleep before starting tomorrow. Maybe I would have more sleep if I got to bed earlier, but that will never happen!!

a Resident Advisor

7:00 a.m. - My alarm went off; I got up and got ready for class. Having your own room has it's perks, I can listen to the radio in the mornings!

8:00 a.m. - I went to my first class, Sociology. At least I managed not to fall asleep today.

9:00 a.m. - I had to haul all the way over to Goolrick for gym class. That hill should be the gym class itself.

10:00 a.m. - My French paper is due tomorrow, so I went to the Mac lab for an hour. I wish I had a computer, or that one of my residents would be nice enough to let me borrow theirs!

11:00 a.m. - Off to French class I go. You have to love the foreign language requirements here, don't you?

12:00 p.m. - I had an Eagles Nest salad for lunch and ate with some of my residents.

12:30 p.m. - I went to Monroe to study for a while, but I managed just to chat with some people from my hall.

2:00 p.m. - I went back to the Mac lab to finish my paper. Maybe I could bribe one of my residents?

5:00 p.m. - My French professor requires us to watch a movie for class. How much fun can you have in one day?

7:00 p.m. - I ran straight from the movie to Virginia for a R.A. meeting. Just one of my more favorite duties.

8:00 p.m. - I started my rounds, which I will have to do three more times before 12:00. You defiantly stay on top of everything that is going on in your building!

a Transfer Student

8:00 a.m. - I wake up to the alarm buzzing noisily in my ear... I roll over and try not to think of how early it is...

9:00 a.m. - After a quick breakfast, I stroll in to my first class, ready to begin the day...

11:00 a.m. - I dash to my meeting with Academic Services, almost late after battling the crowds in the Eagle's Nest... my credits from my last college didn't transfer so now I have to try to convince them that YES, I did really take that Biology class...

12:00 p.m. - I await a fax from my last college, with the proof of my A in Biology...

1:00 p.m. - Since the fax never came, I have to try again after my classes... I hear people in my class complaining about the rigorous foreign language program here; I sure am glad I was able to complete that before I came to MWC!

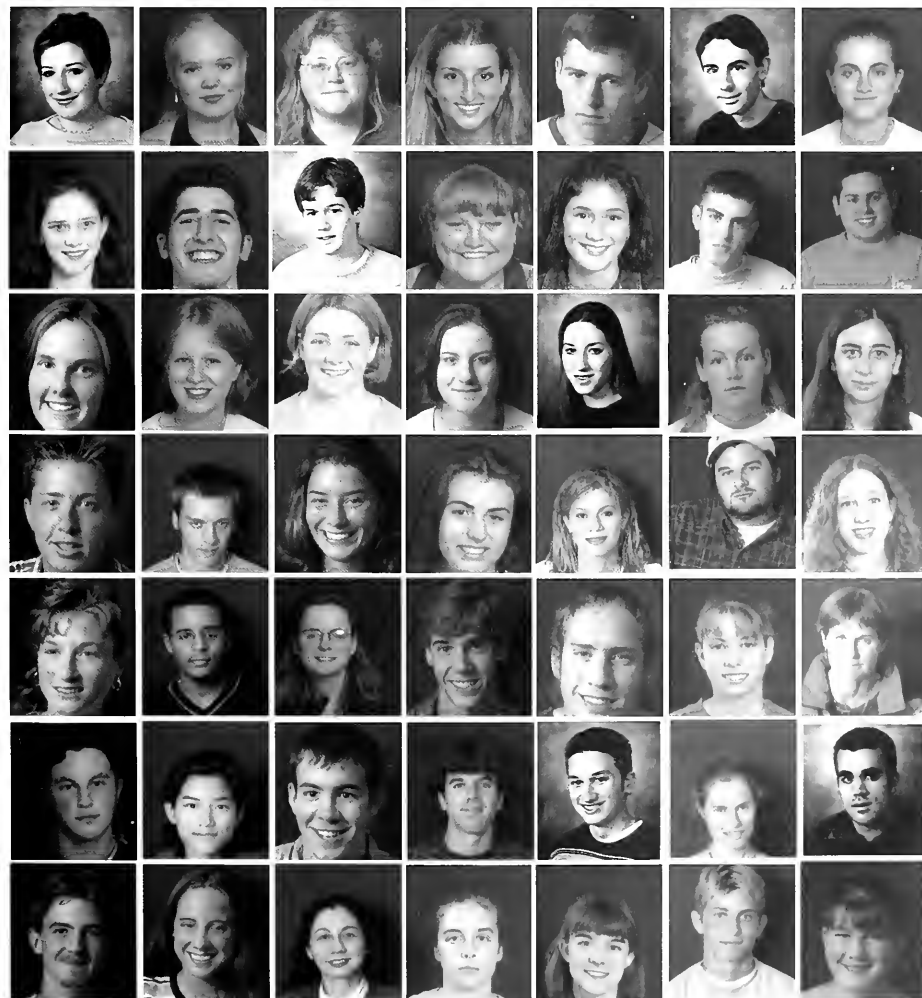

4:45 p.m. - The fax finally comes! I run back to Academic Services before it closes and hand it to them so that I am able to opt out of more sciences...

7:00 p.m. - Since I spent most of my day fighting with the fax machine, I am finally able to get started on some work... hopefully I don't have to battle machines for the rest of my credits...

12:30 a.m. - At last, sleep... dreaming of how I can graduate on time if I could just take this class now, and that class next semester...

a Junior

9:00 a.m. - The alarm goes off. I wake up and realize that it's the Monday after Ring Week. Life has returned to normal. I get up to shower and put something besides the nasty clothes I had worn for a week.

10:00 a.m. - French Class is interesting today. I can't believe that this is my last semester of French. In fact, most of my gen eds are done.

11:00 a.m. - Lunch Time. Finding time to meet with friends is harder and harder. At the ring ceremony they told us that this would happen and explained to us that in 13 months we will be out of here. I can not believe that!

12:00 noon - I have to go register for classes. I'm thinking that if I get there and hour early, I should be fine.

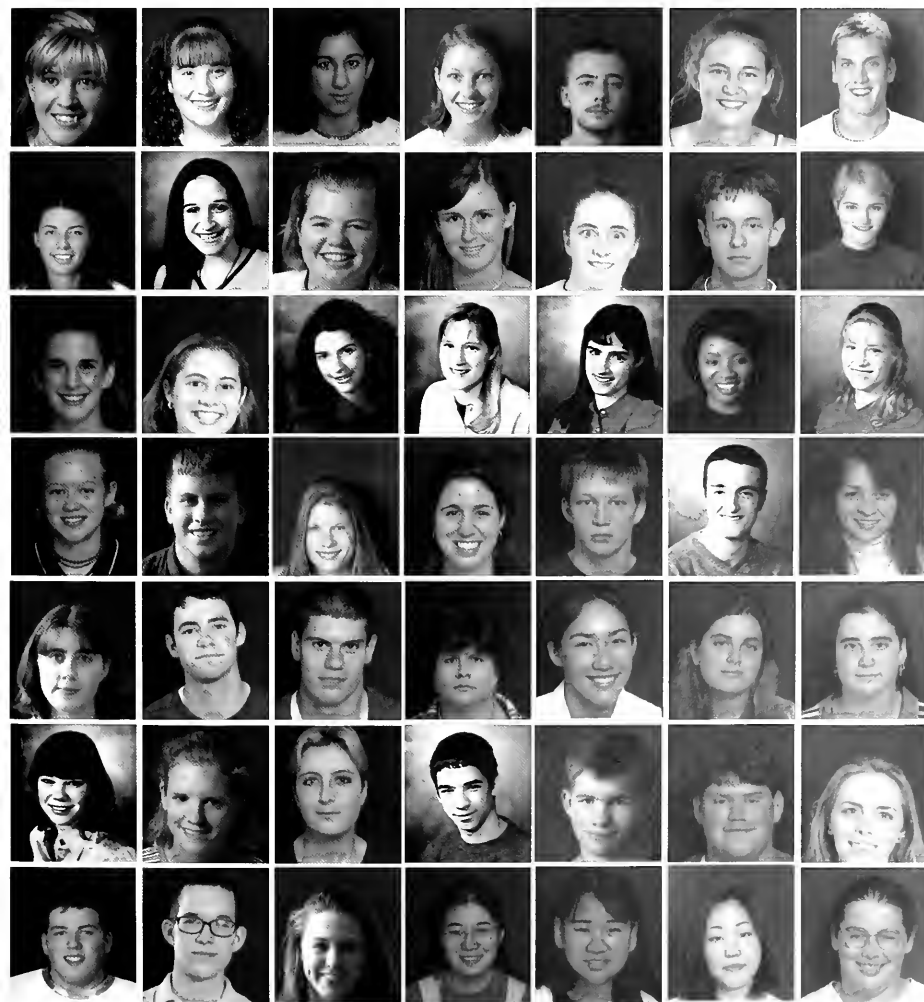

2:00 p.m. - I was wrong. I still didn't get every class that I needed. The one thing I have learned is the value of pass/fail classes. Next year I'm actually going to get classes that I just want to take for fun! I'm off to work now.

5:00 p.m. - Dinner at the Nest with my roommate. Unlike many juniors, we decided that we should stay on campus for our senior year. We think our life will be easier!

6:00 p.m. - It's time to study. I think senioritis has kicked in a year early. It's really hard to concentrate, but this is a really important year, and it's one of the last chances to improve my GPA before it goes on my resume.

12:00 a.m. - I'm going to bed. The homework is not done, but some of it can be put off for another day!

a Sophomore

8:00 a.m. – My alarm goes off. I look at the clock and decide I definitely need to sleep for nine more minutes. I press the snooze button.

8:45 a.m. – I stop by the Eagles Nest grab a cup of coffee and bagel. As a walk to GW sipping my coffee, I wonder if this time I finally have enough credits to get the classes I want.

9:15 a.m. – Sitting in the confined Dodd Auditorium chairs, I review my schedule. I only have one Gen Ed left to complete, the dreaded gym class. As a newly declared business major, I realize that I'll be spending my days in the basement of Monroe.

10:00 a.m. – Finally my turn to schedule. I stand at the counter as the lady types in the course numbers. For the first time I have gotten all my first choices of classes!

1:00 p.m. – After two hours of classes, I'm happy to slide into a booth at Seacobeck for lunch. We discuss our schedules.

2:00 p.m. – It's time for a nap. I quickly doze off.

4:00 p.m. – I check my messages on AOL Instant Messenger. Some friends want to go to Carl's for ice cream.

5:30 p.m. – Returning from Carl's, I search for a parking space. I wish my parking sticker was blue rather than green. I am once again stuck parking in the William Street lot.

7:00 p.m. – I head to the third floor of the library to study for an upcoming test. The library is chilly as usual, but luckily this time I've brought a sweatshirt.

9:00 p.m. – I'm back in my room in front of the TV. My roommate and I never miss an episode of Get Real.

a Freshman

6:15 a.m. - My alarm goes off and I quickly roll over and proceed to hit the snooze alarm five times in a row.
7:00 a.m. - I finally get out of bed and get ready for my day. How did I ever manage to get up this early everyday last year?

8:00 a.m. - 11:00 a.m. - Spanish, Chemistry, and Psychology classes. Gen. Eds., Gen. Eds., and more Gen. Eds.

11:00 a.m. - I am ready for another invigorating lunch in the Rose Room with my friends.

12 p.m. - I go back to my dorm in hopes of getting some studying done and possibly a quick nap! The best difference between high school and college is the nap time.

3 p.m. - 5 p.m. - Time for work in the library as a student aide. Which is perfect for getting homework done.

5 p.m. - Now that the mental workout is over it is time to visit the gym. The freshman 15 will not affect me!

6:30 p.m. - Dinner at the Eagle's Nest is the only thing that will fit into my schedule on a day like today. If my mom really knew how I ate, she wouldn't be impressed.

9 p.m. - I go to my dorm for my weekly ritual with my hall: Felicity.

10 p.m. - 12 a.m. - Back to work at the library to aid any late night researchers.

12 a.m. - I finally get back to my room to catch a few short hours of sleep before I get up and do it all over again tomorrow! 3 years left!!

a Commuting Student....

10:30 a.m. - My alarm goes off in just enough time for me to get to my 11:00 class. I gave up on the early morning classes after my freshman year.

10:45 a.m. - I pile into my car and drive the few blocks to campus. Hopefully I will be able to catch someone leaving class and steal their parking space. Parking is always a hassle.

12:00 p.m. - I meet some friends for lunch at the Eagles Nest. I haven't eaten in Seacobek since I lived on campus, and I save money by not getting a meal plan. I just use my eagle one dollars.

12:30 p.m. - I go to the computer lab to check email and play on the web. Since I have to dial in from home, which ties up the phone lines, I use my breaks between classes to get online.

1:00 p.m. - I go to class, and attempt to pay attention well enough to take notes.

2:00 p.m. - I try to remember where I parked, and I find my car and drive back home. I have become the master at parallel parking since I have lived in Fredericksburg.

3:00 p.m. - My roommate reminds me that next month's rent is due in a few days, and I owe her money for bills. I write her a check and then spend some time doing homework.

8:30 p.m. - I realize that tomorrow is trash day, and it is my turn to empty the cans. uuuugh.

12:30 a.m. - I get ready for bed and try to get some sleep. Tomorrow I get to do it all over again....

The average student takes 16 credit hours, how much time do you spend outside of class doing homework? We all think it's too much time. It will pay off - at least that is what they keep telling us. Change your perspective though. If it weren't for class, what would we complain about all the time? A wise man once said that we are not truly happy unless we have something to complain about. Then there are those who enjoy the workload... ✕

Activities Beyond the Lab

The Psychology Department is not only famous for its lab rats and its experiments held on Psyc 100 students, but it is also known for its ability to set aside the challenges of the academic course load to have a little fun. A few times a semester, the Psychology Department invites all majors and prospective majors to abandon their statistics or research methodology homework to have an afternoon with some excitement. This past fall semester was host to the psychology department's fall picnic, Snow Blitz (a party held for those over 21), and a surprise baby shower for two psyc professors who were expecting their first child.

The fall picnic was held at the beginning of the semester at St. Claire Brooks park. Psychology students had an opportunity to escape campus for an afternoon of barbecuing and of strenuous athletic competition against their professors. Senior psyc major Jill Ellis remembers that "the weather was perfect that day. There were about 50 students who came out to the picnic, and we all engaged in fun rivalry against the professors in volleyball and softball."

Snow Blitz was held at the end of the semester at a psyc major's house off campus. "Along with lots of food, there were coolers of beer, alcoholic punch, and jello shooters. We had a lot of fun hanging out with the professors" said Dan Traas, senior psyc major.

Psychology majors definitely have a lot of fun events in store for their years at MWC.

Student Teachers

Inspiring Children

Those in the education program must spend a semester student teaching as part of their curriculum. As student teachers, they spend part of the semester observing an experienced teacher, and the other part of the semester taking control of the classroom.

Student teacher Iysha Burt comments about her experiences as a teacher. "Student teaching is one of those experiences that you love and hate, but that you will always remember. There is just so much work and time involved and that can be strenuous, but you fall in love with the kids. I will forever reminisce about these students that will always be the first 'kids' I ever taught, and this will always be the first real teaching experience that I ever had. That in itself means so much to me."

Another student teacher, Jim Reagan, also comments about his classroom tactics. "What I try to do in my class is get the students to think that math is fun. A lot of students think that they cannot do math – but they never try the problems. My goal is to get students to think positively and acknowledge that they can do it. Also, I try to listen to my students as best I can. There are so many times when they just need someone to listen to them, and hopefully, I can be that person."

Student teachers dedicate their time to inspiring children. Teachers are, after all, some of the most influential people for our children.

The James Monroe Center

The new campus at MWC

The James Monroe Center for Graduate and Professional Studies opened its doors this year for the first time.

The center offers 3 degrees and certificate programs, such as the Teacher Certificate Program and the Business Certificate Program.

The first degree is the Bachelor of Professional Studies. This includes Computer Technology and Leadership Management. They also offer the Bachelor of Liberal Studies for adult students. Residents of MWC are familiar with this program already since many BLS students are in class with BA and BS students. Adult students can receive credit from life or work experiences, and this program is already popular on this campus. The final program offered is the Masters of Arts in Liberal Studies. This is a part time program that reaches across a broad range of academic disciplines.

One BLS student, who prefers not to be mentioned, referred to the new campus as another way that the college is separating the adult and commuting students from the Mary Washington campus. The new center can also be commended because the administration is looking at the obstacles the adult student faces and is trying to work around them, broadening their options.

The new center will have an effect on MWC at some point. Most residents of MWC haven't paid much attention to the new campus, but in the future that will change. It will be very interesting to see how the relationship between MWC and the JMC Center progresses.

Pluses and Minuses

The new grading system

The number of students who made Dean's list in the fall dropped considerably in Spring 2000 to a decrease of 108 students. The President's list dropped to just 48 students this Spring. The steep decline of academic honors recipients in the 1999 Fall semester was a result of the new Plus/Minus grading system.

The new system, which divides each letter grade into +, average or - was proposed and introduced by the Board of Visitors. The number grade that determines +, - or average is left to the professor's discretion, or some departments are making it departmental policy. Now there is no just slipping by with a B, a student will receive a B-, which can drastically change a grade point average. On the other hand, if the student earned a B+, he or she will now earn more than the 3.0 he or she would have received under the old system.

Many students have found that this system is detrimental to their GPA, often bringing it down by several tenths. One student, who wished to remain anonymous, would have made Dean's list with three A's and one C. Instead she received three A-'s and one C-, giving her lower gpa of almost four tenths of a point. Others, however, feel that the plus/minus grading scale helps their average; a plus can add up to a tenth of a point.

The justification for the new grading system is to increase competition not only between students, but with other institutions as well. The new system better determines the rank each student has in the class.

Buring the Midnight Oil

Where MWC goes to study

The primary reason why college students attend college is to obtain an education. Whether they will admit that or not, it does involve studying. When and where they choose to study depends on the individual.

There are many places to study on this campus. The library and Trinkle Hall are the obvious choices. However, these places are only packed during exams, and the library is only open until midnight....

Dorm rooms are always a place to get some work done. That is if the other dorm residents don't decide to play tag in the hallways, and the building is quiet for once. The odds of someone getting any productive work done in the dorms are slim to none, so studying in your room is more of a procrastination technique than anything else.

So where does MWC go to study? One Wood employee, Susan Wilburn, uses the faculty-staff dining room. She uses a table for each subject and circles around the room until she's hit every single table. Another student, Keri Henley says she likes to study at the Baptist Student Union because she "likes to be able to take breaks and have someone to talk to." Also, a lot of student officers take advantage of the new student offices, especially since they have moved to a new location. In addition, finding an empty classroom in one of the academic buildings can provide the quiet atmosphere for studying.

Studying isn't anyone's absolute favorite thing to do, but with the right spot, it can be tolerable!

Adult Students

The Bachelor of Liberal Studies

The Bachelor of Liberal Studies is a popular program at Mary Washington College.

The BLS program was created to provide an education for the nontraditional student. It allows working adults to complete their education while working and with family responsibilities. For the BLS degree, a student must have 120 credit hours. The general education requirements (30 credits) are a little broader than the BA/BS degrees. They include English Competence, Humanities, Social Science, Natural Sciences and Mathematics, and Communication Arts. In the major, the BLS degree requires 30 to 39 hours and the BLS student can have up to 51 semester hours of elective credits.

Most BLS students attend classes at night. According to one BLS student,

Ruth Ann Harvey, it is still difficult to reach teachers. "Their office hours are during the day, and it's not always possible to get off work to go ask questions." However, she also does give some professors credit, adding "Some professors respond to email questions and they are willing to accommodate BLS students with office hours close to the class time if we ask them." Many of the BA/BS students take advantage of the night classes. Melissa Pelletier notes, "I prefer to go to class at night, I pay attention better and I'm less likely to skip them."

Overall, the BLS program brings an important aspect into continuing education to Mary Washington. With the completion of a separate campus strictly for this reason, the program will only continue to grow.

Major Diversity

The original majors on campus

Mary Washington College, being a liberal arts college, offers a wide range of majors. Sometimes, however, there are students who want just a little more diversity in their major selection. And, of course, there are those students who feel that just one major is not enough for their academic endeavors. These students are the students who choose to either take a second major, or who choose to create their own major.

To create your own major, there is a process of steps that you must go through. You first have to write a proposal stating what major you would like to create, what classes you would like to take and why, how this major and these classes would benefit your college career, and how it would help your future. Throughout the course of your college career, you can make additions or revisions to your curriculum to ensure that you are taking what you want to take.

Senior Bethany Sullivan decided to not only create a women's studies major, but she is double majoring with psychology. She says that "in taking the initiative to create my special major, I have been able to make my learning more specific to my interests and future plans." Junior Jason Roy agrees. "With a special major, I was able to create a more specific set of classes that are more focused on what I want to do after I graduate." Jason created a criminology major because he wants to join the police academy when he graduates.

Taking on a double major and being able to create your own major expand the diverse offerings of MWC.

Faculty and Staff

The other side to campus

Try to imagine this campus without the people who run it. What would Mary Washington be like?

If there were no admissions officers, there would be no one at the school. The same goes for the financial aid office! The administrators deal with all the things that we don't think about. They balance the budget (and get frustrated with us for not balancing our student budgets!), advertise and promote the college, and organize the services that we take for granted. How do you think Mary Washington has a post office, a document center, and even a company that feeds us? Auxiliary Services does all of that!

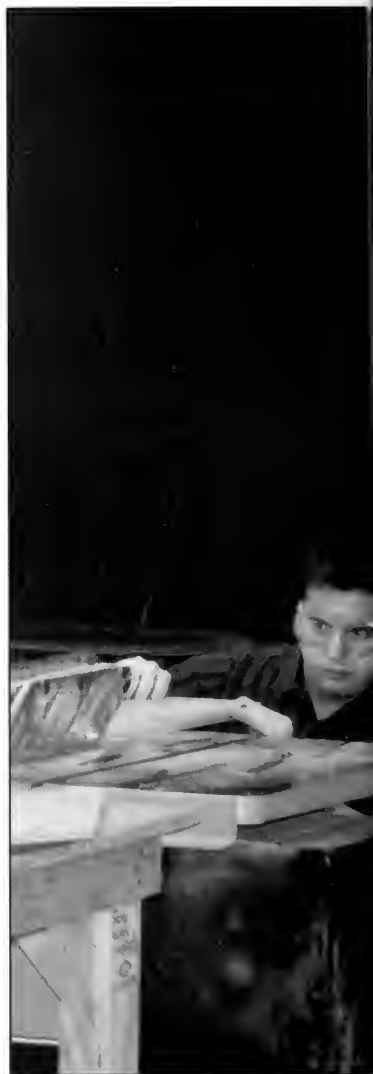

Now think about the college without housekeepers and grounds keepers. This campus is beautiful, and it's not because we are the cleanliest bunch of students (think Ring Week and what the post office looks like after a mass mailing, and of course, there are the hall bathrooms...). These men and women clean up after us. That can not be an easy job. But it's definitely an essential one.

The people who run the services on campus are not state employees. This includes the Post Office, Document Center and the Wood Company. The only concern we have about who runs these services is how much of our money it takes to run. But can you imagine having to distribute mail to over 4,000 people twice a day? How about cooking and serving for those same people for 3 meals a day? Or dealing with students who have waited for the last minute to make transparencies for his or her presentation? Again, not a job that is easy.

Now we get to the professors. Why else would we all be here? They are patient and understanding. The professors are always willing to help, even when we are given an extension on that project or program and we still wait until the last minute to realize there was a reason why they thought we needed extra time. The professors council us, write recommendations for us, and even let even us vent in their offices. They really do make this college an excellent place to get an education.

Take a look around the campus, and notice the people who make Mary Washington College. There are a wide variety of people here. It takes a whole lot more than students to make up a campus.

A Winter Rose Ball

History Preserved

Once a year, the historic preservation society hosts a Victorian Rose Ball. For two days, students and members of the community can be transported to another time and place.

A Winter Rose Ball is a Victorian-style celebration of the feast of St. Valentine. Tickets are sold to the community for $18 a couple and $10 a single. MWC students can buy tickets for $8 a couple.

While Victorian dress is not required, that is half the fun of this dance. The dresses (most handmade remakes of original patterns) are beautiful, with the gentlemen looking very distinguished.

Before you could attend the ball however, you must attend the dance lessons on Saturday. Fredericksburg local, Elleen Goodman, gave the dance lesson. Dances included the waltz, mazurka, basket quadrille, polka, courting dance, Virginia reel, grand march, patty-cake polka and the barn dance. No one expects you to know all of this after one day, but at least you have a better understanding of just how different dancing was during the Victorian time period.

At the dance, students can participate in a number of Victorian-period activities. The students who organized the ball researched these activities thoroughly. There are toasts, parlor games, an edible ice cream sculpture, punch, and gingerbread valentines.

And what would a ball be without games? The participants can play blindman's bluff, and "honey if you really love me, will you smile?" That sounds like it could get a lot of guys in trouble!

The Ball is a success every year, and it gives the students a chance to live the history, rather than just study it.

Did you know that there are more than 80 active organizations on campus? That's impressive! MWC has everything from a weekly newspaper to a fencing club, and from a radio station to a scuba diving club. Challenge yourself to look at it from a different perspective: How many students does it take to run all these organizations? How much credit do these individuals get for this amount of time and energy? Would MWC be the same without these clubs? ✕

igniting spirituality

Many students, especially in their freshman year, turn to religious organizations in order to involve themselves in a somewhat familiar community that shares their common beliefs. They turn to these organizations in order to find sources of strength and encouragement in the many difficulties of college years. Students frequently gather together in worship services and to hear speakers so that they can carry their religious beliefs into their daily lives. Not only do these organizations help students share their faith with one another, they also give them the opportunity to actively participate in service projects for the community at large.

Religious organizations have branched out into many aspects of the community. During the past year, students got involved in the community by working with the homeless, the elderly, and the dying. Thus, these organizations are committed to enriching their lives as well as the lives of members of the community.

reaching out

Many college students try to actively involve themselves in their communities. Mary Washington College students are no exception. Many clubs on campus offer students opportunities to give their services to the community. Students in organizations such as MWC Ambassadors, Rotoract, Circle K, and C.O.A.R. actively involve themselves in service projects throughout the year, either by on campus projects, or hands-on projects in the Fredericksburg area. A few of the examples of volunteering events include C.O.A.R.'s Into-the-Streets program and Circle K's blood drives. These programs among many others took a great amount of time for these volunteers, but what they gained from these experiences would be much greater than their time spent.

It is hard to differentiate between the foreign language floor at Westmoreland Hall and the French, Spanish, and German clubs. They are jointly related, and the activities they provide appeal not only to the students living on these floors, but also to the rest of the students on campus. The French, Spanish, and German clubs provide students with an opportunity to learn more about the cultures whose language they are taking. Also, it gives students the opportunity to practice these languages for those difficult foreign language classes.

With the 2000 Presidential election quickly approaching in November, many students found new incentives to join political organizations. The two main groups on campus, the College Republicans and Young Democrats, attracted the majority of involvement.

The College Republicans were active supporters of Mel Sheridan's Senate campaign. They also supported and did fundraisers for former Governor George Allen's Senate campaign. The group held social events; such as their joint effort with Circle K in hosting the first ever Mr. MWC contest. This contest was a huge success with students, and brought the organization a lot of publicity and student involvement.

The Young Democrats supported Ed Houck in his Senate campaign and helped celebrate his victory afterwards. They were also attendants at a Kennedy-King dinner where they listened to President Clinton give a speech.

These clubs helped bring political viewpoints and activities to campus.

Asian Student Association

The Asian Student Association focuses on creating a unified group of students interested in Asian culture. They have sponsored many wonderful activities to this end, including a Vietnamese festival, a banquet featuring authentic Asian cuisine, the "Culture Shock" dance, and a performance of Indian Classical Dance.

eeena Telichicherla, a well-known Indian Classical dancer, was invited to perform at Mary Washington last November. In Indian Classical Dance, facial expressions and hand gestures are an important part of the performance.

diversity

Many clubs concentrate on building unity among the students on campus. The Black, Asian, and Hispanic Student Associations, Women of Color (WOC), Brothers of a New Direction (BOND), and Pride Reflecting Individuals of Sexual Minorities (PRISM) all want to increase awareness of different races, cultures, and life-styles. At the same time, these groups not only want to deal with the differences between people, but also the similarities. Students of any race, culture, or sexual orientation are welcome in all these organizations. On a campus that is openly criticized for its lack of diversity, these groups show that all people will be accepted and respected at Mary Washington. Erin Murphy of PRISM said it best, "By joining PRISM, students can learn more about themselves and realize that they are not alone in feeling the way they do." Those are the main reasons why these groups are so popular and influential at MWC; they speak to the valid needs of a college student: acceptance and community.

Toni Fashola, a sophomore, enjoys the Culture Shock dance put on by the Asian Student Association this past November. Toni is the Social Chair of the ASA. Behind her, Peter Squire, a junior, grooves to the tunes spun by DJ Enferno.

The ASA sponsored an event called "Taste of the Orient" last semester. It featured authentic Asian food and even a traditional Chinese dragon performance.

dynamic sounds

Nowhere are student's musical abilities more evident than in Mary Washington College's musical groups. Performances by Symfonics, Treblemakers, Encore, Jazz Band, and the Mary Washington College Community Symphony Orchestra give the Mary Washington Community a taste of great music. These groups offer an exciting variety of music to their audiences from both the Fredericksburg community and the college community alike. Symfonics, Encore, and Treblemakers all had an exciting year. Symfonics opened for Ball in the House, a Boston based group, along with hosting an invitational of other college a capella groups. Encore, meanwhile, performed two shows of their own, including a performance of Broadway hits. The Jazz Band and Orchestra both performed several concerts that drew large crowds from the Fredericksburg area along with students from the college.

"Music is a great activity to be involved with on this campus. Being in the orchestra really brings together the community and the students."

After a hard week of classes, tests, papers, and stress, students find various ways to release their built up tension. Clubs such as the Trek Club, the Martial Arts Club, the Fencing Club, the Dance Team, the Equestrian Club, and Ultimate Frisbee allow students to pursue activities to relax and enjoy some action. Many of these clubs compete among their peers as well as against other schools.

The Fencing Club practices every week and holds at least one competition during the semester to show off their talents. On another part of campus, on Friday afternoons, students gather at Ball Circle to engage themselves in a game of Ultimate Frisbee. Meanwhile, the Trek Club provides students the opportunity to be adventurous by taking white water rafting trips, horseback riding through the mountains, and even sky diving.

Many clubs at Mary Washington allow students to show off their unusual talents or even let them be daring for a day.

Art is an integral part of the campus community. The existence of fine art, visual art, and performing art clubs proves that many students value art as a necessary and enjoyable part of their lives. Students can join the Art club, the Social Dance club, Frames-per-Second, the Film club, join the staff of Polemic, the literary/art magazine, or participate in any of the productions put on by the theater department. This year, the Art club has been particularly active, sponsoring tie-dye and book binding workshops, and visiting art galleries in Philadelphia. The Social Dance club has hosted many events as well, such as a Swing Dance and a Latin Dancing night. Frames-per-Second has held viewings for a number of films, such as "Rushmore." As the recognition of art's importance in daily lives grows, hopefully more clubs like these will form on campus, bringing more appreciation of the arts.

On the air, but where?

Many Mary Washington students would love to listen to the college radio station, but they can't seem to find it. Only a few dorms have the cable hookups that allow for good reception of 91.5. WMWC realizes this and is trying to remedy the situation. The station knows that in order to get their voice heard on campus, the station needs to be available to all students in every dorm. So, for the time being, where can you go to hear 91.5? Try the Eagle's Nest!

Eric Kelsey struggles as he tries to open a cd and stall for time. Dead air between songs is a no-no! Luckily, Eric is able to keep his cool as he thinks of something clever to say so the listeners remain unaware and pleased.

The Review Process

So how does WMWC find those great new songs to add to the playlist? Here are the steps:

- > CDs are sent to the station's Music Director
- > A previously selected committee looks through and distributes the cds among themselves
- > Each individual reviewer listens to the entire cd and judges it based upon their personal judgement of the quality of the music
- > The critics are asked not to impose their personal biases in the review process
- > Certain elements included in the critique are the type of music, "special picks," the "do not plays" and comparisons to better known artists
- > The critiques and the cds are returned to the Music Director for a final review
- > The Music Director then chooses those special songs that make the playlist.

Class Council is a dynamic part of the Mary Washington Community. Class council officers and representatives from each class put on such events as Halloweens, Fall Formal, Spring Formal, Devil Goat Day and many other popular events that mark the school year. Fall and Spring Formal are two of the most well known of the class council events where students can dress up in their best and cut loose to great music.

Besides providing activities for the student body, Class Council sponsors events for individual classes in celebration of their achievements on campus. Events such as Senior Count Down, Junior Ring Week, and Grad Ball are put on so that students may have special memories of their last years at Mary Washington College. Class Council members work beyond sponsoring student activities by having many bonding moments and events for themselves. Often members will gather at houses for a party on a snow day or to play laser tag at Funland. Class Council members come together as an integral part of Mary Washington's social life.

The Association of Residence Halls, known as ARH, has worked hard to provide a healthy, on-campus living experience. They are in charge of the providing the funds for which the residence halls on campus can perform their special events. Each president of the residence halls meets once a week to discuss activities and gain ideas for their residence halls. These presidents then take those ideas to their respective hall councils in order to implement those ideas.

The individual hall councils work to bring out a sense of community in each of the halls. From setting certain standards to sponsoring dances and cookouts, hall councils do it all. They help to bring out a sense of tradition and loyalty to each of the residence halls.

ARH has had a very busy year from 1999 to 2000, sponsoring numerous dances and events across campus. Also, members of ARH have attended conferences in order to share ideas with other similar organizations to take back with them. Members of ARH thus have no opportunity to slow down yet.

From the source.... "We were most impressed with the team's attitude this season. For such a young team composed mainly of freshmen and sophomores, the maturity expressed both on and off the field was definitely a key factor to our success." - Aaron Bernstein and Martin Smith; "Championship vision is definitely what our team had this season. Hopefully that will carry over into next season and we can work twice as hard to go even further." - Ryan Geib; "The most disappointing part of the season was losing to Salisbury in the CAC championship game. Just hanging out with the guys and feeling the team chemistry even after such a disappointing loss made up for it, though." - Jon Likowski; "We had a great season this year led by great upperclassmen. I think our team will continue to improve and look to be a very threatening force next season. We have a great team environment that will help our success in the future." - Matt Heimerle; "Defense has definitely been the key to our successes in the past. As I leave the team this year, I look back at these guys like a family. We've all worked so hard together, encouraging each other both on and off the field. The guys themselves, whether we were winning or losing, have been my favorite part of playing soccer at Mary Washington." - Jordi Kleinman.

Even though rugby isn't yet a varsity sport, competition was always tough, with the teams playing against top Division I teams throughout the state. The teams handled themselves very well against these top teams, showing promise to return next year with more force than ever.

PUSHED TO THE LIMIT....

From the source.... "The season was a little disappointing because we just couldn't seem to gel together as a team. Everyone's returning for next season, though, so that should give us a little time during the off season to learn how we work best together. So many players were brought in mid-season and there wasn't enough of an adjustment period. We definitely have the most talent in the league. We just need to concentrate more on bringing it out." - Dan Dupras; "Because it was only my first year on the team, I didn't take the losses we had as hard as some of the other guys. I know that if we can just learn to work together, our talent will start to show and lead us to more victories next year." - Tony Yates; "I'm just going to learn from the experiences we had this year and make the most of it next season. That's all we can do." - Paul Stoddard

"I had a really good time over spring break in Hilton Head, SC. I have always loved working hard and I know that's what it takes to win. Our team's doing really well right now and I think a lot of that can be credited to how hard we worked over spring break. I didn't miss going home at all because I knew that this is what it means to be successful."

- Conor Smith

The crew team took a bus to Clemson, South Carolina, for the week of spring break. The team practiced twice a day, running the three miles to Lake Hartwell and back each time. The team also had to run one and a half miles to and from breakfast and dinner every day. They stayed in a hotel nearby with other teams from around the country, including track and baseball teams. The week consisted of mostly intense training with one scrimmage during the week. The team did have an afternoon off, with which they explored the small town of Clemson. "It's amazing how small the town actually is. The university is huge, but the town is even smaller than downtown Fredericksburg." - Virginia Henley

The men and women's tennis teams both travelled to Hilton Head, South Carolina, for a week of training and competition over spring break. The teams stayed at separate locations and held separate practices during the week. The men's team stayed at a plantation and the women's team had a house nearby. On the way down, the teams stopped halfway at Methodist College to play a match on Saturday and then continued another four hours to the beach. They played in two other matches that week and practiced a couple of hours each day. On their free time, they had fun on the beach, playing golf, or just relaxing in the warm weather.

The men and women's swimming teams travelled to Florida for a week of training during Winter Break. The group flew into the South Beach area of Miami and met up with another team from New York, Oswego College. The week consisted of long morning and afternoon practices, with the swimmers swimming an average of 7 - 8 miles a day. In between practices, they were able to hit the beach and enjoy relaxing in the sun. Many swimmers claimed they couldn't handle the beach some days because the practices were so demanding. For a few, free time during the day meant a chance to head back to the room for long naps. Competition wasn't stressed during the week. It was a chance for swimmers to build their bodies up and tire them out for taper when they returned. Taper was the final step before both teams entered the CAC championships.

New Faces and Places

The women's lacrosse team spent a week in St. Petersburg, Florida, training with other lacrosse teams from around the nation. The team had two practice sessions a day, with one scrimmage day in which they played seven teams, and one game day in which they got to play the Scotland National Team. The team also received valuable advice from Division I coaches that were at the training sessions and offered their help. For fun, they had one day off at the beach and another that they spent between sessions lounging in the sun.

"The trip was a time for bonding for the team. You see other sides to your teammates other than just the competitive, field side. We had a great time laying out on the beach on our day off and going to the movies and out for ice cream on our free nights. It made all the training worth the sweat and sore muscles." - Meghan Twomey

The synchronized swimming team took a week off from school in March to fly to Columbus, Ohio, to compete in Collegiate Nationals. The competition was held at Ohio State University and included teams from all over the nation. For most of the week, the girls practiced at the pool and land drilled their routines over and over again. There were two actual days of semi-final performing and then on Saturday finals were held. The team was forced to travel without a coach, who left the team shortly before the competition to take another job elsewhere. Luckily the team was able to convince a senior from the year's previous team to come with them and serve as their coach. Overall, the girls had a successful finish among the teams who competed.

One of my best wins was against Salisbury. I lost to the guy during the fall season in a very long match, but during regular season in the spring, I didn't have any trouble beating him through straight sets." - Conor Smith; "My last season on the team was a good one. DISTRACTIONS

Athletes have the difficult task of concentrating on the game in the midst of distractions from many sources. They find themselves having to tune out the atmosphere around them and focus only on the job at hand - beating the opposition. Distractions can include anything from rowdy fans to painful injuries, the intensity of the distraction usually depending on the individual athlete. "There's nothing more distracting during a competition than someone near the field smoking. The smoke gets to me when I'm playing and I can smell the smoke from the sidelines," said John Buchanan, of his experiences on the soccer field. Other players feel more distracted by sources within the competition. "A coach yelling the same thing over and over again from the sidelines is the worst. Most of the time we know what we have to do. He's told us already before we went out onto the field. Yelling the same thing over and over again is just a distraction." - Jay Montepare, of his experiences on the baseball field. Wherever the distractions may come from, athletes agree that though they may be just another element standing in the way of victory, there's no possible way to eliminate them. Athletes have to accept them as a part of competition.

Williams

Cheering for the team, fans gather near the field against a fence. Athletes admit that fans pump them up for the game and keep them going in tough competition. Unfortunately though, when fans are this close, elements such as cigarette or cigar smoke, or yelling directly at a specific player when he/she is nearby can be very distracting.

Using Aggression

From the source.... "We experienced a lot of adversity this season that, in the end, only brought us closer as a team. We know now what we have to improve to be a more successful team next season." - J.B. Hodgson; "It was a disappointing season all around but since we're such a young squad, all we can do is get better." - Justin Neale; "The MWC men's lacrosse team tried their hardest and despite several season ending injuries were able to make the CAC playoffs." - Jamie Test; "We definitely had some tough obstacles throughout the season, but we tried our best to overcome them." - Ryan Mason; "The most memorable game we played was against Goucher College, when we beat them 11-8. We came together as a team and just played lacrosse and that's what it's all about. Lax is beast." - Joe Boulrier; "You have to have tough seasons in with the good ones. I just see it as a building experience. The team learned how to work better together throughout the season to have a more unified team on the field." - Ryan Wellner.

The girls' and guys' teams really came together to support each other. We made posters and cheered the entire time. The Battlefield decided that the year 2000 needed to be acknowledged in some way. The change of centuries is too important to overlook, but we didn't want our whole book to be dedicated to the millennium. Why were people so worried about the Y2K bug? Seems a little ridiculous now that it's come and gone and life remained the same. But change your perspective and think what could have happened if everyone ignored the turning of the year. We will never know... 𐄂

Y2K

We all know, this isn't the beginning of the new millennium. The year 2000 is the last year in the 20th century. We may party like it's 1999, but most of us realize that partying like it's 2000 is a little more significant than simply changing all four digits of the date. However, the media has played the whole thing up, so we have no choice but to ignore the ignorance of these people and act like this is the new millennium. With this new year we have to deal with what was named the millennium bug. What exactly is this bug? Computers were originally programmed to store the date as a two digit number. This means that 1999 was stored as 99. When the new year arrived, the date would roll back to 00. This can cause failures in arithmetic, comparisons sorting data when including dates, and can even corrupt databases.

Computers are everywhere. Basically everyone is connected in some way to one another if you own a computer. This means that if one system fails, it can affect thousands more.

Of course, January 1, 2000 is not the only date that programmers were worried about this year. September 9, 1999 is 9/9/99 which is used to indicate in some cases "never" or the end of a file. This can cause some cases of failure in some systems. Also, the leap year is a problem. If some computers simply rolled back to the 1900's and the system has appeared to work fine, February 29, 2000 will cause some problems. 1900 was not a leap year, and 2000 is. The date will not register with some systems, and that again will cause the computers to fail.

Why isn't this an easy fix? It sounds like it should be, all that you have to do is to reset the date to read as a four digit number. That means fixing over 2 BILLION lines of computer code and replacing chips that can not handle the new numbers. There simply isn't enough programmers to examine and fix the problem before the new century.

As for the end of the world as a result of this little bug? Highly unlikely (hindsight is a wonderful thing). People were more concerned were you ready?

if their VCR would work then if there would be worldwide chaos. Buy a DVD player if you are that concerned. There are those who will stock up on batteries and canned food. Gas lines will be a little longer and people will be less likely to go out on New Years Eve (maybe because of the fact that the prices they would like to charge just for dinner can pay for 12 credit hours for an out of state student?) And some people have gone so far as to build shelters and are planning to hide in them. That is scarier then the millennium bug itself.

The world didn't end. We all watched the year change all over the world (thanks to the new technology that was supposed to end the world) and nothing happened. Kind of a let down. We had to go to work, come back to school, and no one added millions into my bank account. The worst that happened is some guy was charged for late fees for 100 years. The owner of the store simply took out paper and pencil and figured out the correct fee.

With the millennium such a let down, we have all kind of forgotten that fact that it was the end of a century and a decade. The only reason there was a scare was because of the incredible technology that has been developed in the past 100 years. It wasn't just the beginning of the last year of the millennium, it was also the end of the 1990's and the 20th century. How will we remember the 90's? What stands out from the last 100 years? There were dozens of books written and countless magazine articles written about those very things. The Battlefield decided to take the next few pages and give this significant year a little bit of credit. Enjoy the last issue of the Battlefield in the 20th century.

We have come to the end of the 2000 Battlefield. Of course, change the perspective and it's the beginning of the next volume of the Mary Washington College Yearbook. It's funny how things work like that. If you change your perspective, you can even make an ending a new beginning. As the song goes, "every new beginning comes from some other beginning's end."✕

To Kathy, our daughter:
From our little girl to college you went,
With every excitement to share each event.

We worried, but trusted you'd make the right choices,
And you never let us down by listening to negative voices.

Junior year brought changes we all accepted-

A runaway marriage, we never objected.
Senior year brought us joy, with the birth of your baby boy,

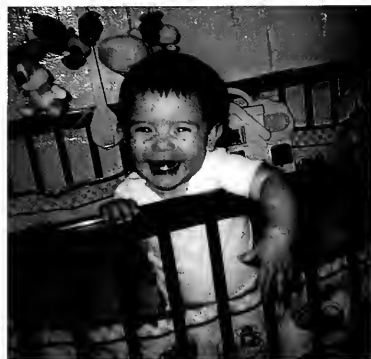

And also the trial of classes with your new little toy.

The years are now over and we couldn't be prouder,

Of a mother, wife, sister, cousin, granddaughter and especially our daughter.

Pakurur

I've made a moon-catchin' net,
And I'm going huntin' tonight,
I'll run along swingin' it over my head,
I'll run along swingin' it over my head,
And grab for that big ball of light.

So tomorrow just look at the sky
And if there's no moon you can bet
I've found what I sought and I finally caught
The moon in my moon-catchin' net.

But if the moon's still shinin' there
Look close underneath and you'll get
A clear look at me in the sky swingin' free
With a star in my moon-catchin' net.

letters from the editors

When I look back on this year and all we have accomplished, I am amazed. I have worked on the yearbook all of my four years here at Mary Washington, and until this year, we had yet to meet a deadline, had yet to finish the book before the end of the school year, and had yet to make it all come together in the end. The entire yearbook staff is to be commended. We have not only pulled together and come up with - I dare say - the best yearbook this college has put together in a long time, but we have also done it all ahead of schedule. WOW!!!

The Battlefield staff this year was marvelous. To each and every one of our editors, I owe you a heartfelt Thank you. You have shown your hard work and dedication through the thick and the thin, through hectic (to put it mildly) deadline schedules, and through all sorts of complications. You all came together and produced the best ever Battlefield yearbook. I hope when you reflect on this past year, you are proud of all you have done. We could have never done this without you.

I would also like to extend a Thank You to all of you who have contributed to the yearbook in any way - be it through writing copy, providing pictures, helping with contracts, or just listening when we needed to vent. You all are awesome, and your support and information has helped us through a difficult year.

I am going to miss working on the Battlefield. Four years have had a lot of fun (among other things). Melissa, thank you for all you have taught me, for putting up with my ideas of "classy," and for working countless numbers of hours next to me. (Only a few people can put up with that!) I have enjoyed getting to know you over two years working together, and I wish you all the best next year. We made a good team.

Sincerely,
Kerri Pakurar

Our goal for this book was to give the Battlefield a good name on this campus, and to make it the classiest volume yet. I think that we not only succeeded in doing that, but hopefully surpassed everyone's expectations. In four months, a small dedicated staff put together a 280 page book. And we put it together on time, and on budget. That amazes me, and that even amazed our publishing company. We succeeded in raising the bar of what is expected of the Battlefield.

Producing this book may have seemed like just hard work at times, but the staff hung in there. Because it was Kerri's and my first year, we made a lot of mistakes (I made most of them!) and we (again, it was more me) probably were rough around the edges. I want to thank everyone of the staff, especially the editors. Without you, there would be no Battlefield. I feel like thanking you simply isn't enough. I hope you all look back through this book and feel proud of what you have accomplished, you should be, and I am proud of all of you.

I also need to thank everyone who contributed in the production of the yearbook. This includes everyone who wrote stories or identified people or helped in any other way possible. This also includes everyone who just simply listened to us stress. I still have one more year, and I am going to need everyone again, so please hang in there. Thank you all!

Kerri, I don't know what to say. You have put up with so much from me. Without you, this book would not look anything like it does now. You were always patient with me, and because of your careful attention to details (I'm not calling you anal) this book not only looks good, it looks consistent, classy and everything that we wanted it to be. I don't know how I'm going to do this next year without you, it will never be the same. I really am going to miss you. We really did make a good team. Sincerely,
Melissa Pelletier
